Introduction

The three EU-ACP collaborative programmes: EDULINK, the ACP Science and Technology Programme (S&T II) and the ACP Caribbean & Pacific Research Programme for Sustainable Development (CP-RPSD), offer opportunities for actors in the ACP higher education and research sectors to address both the structural as well as the scientific and technological challenges faced by ACP Member States. The continued participation of a variety of organisations in these three programmes is extremely impressive and a clear demonstration of the substantial interest amongst the academic and science communities.

The three programmes offer a unique framework for actors, both from the ACP Member States and from across the world to connect and collaborate in a truly global exchange of experiences and know-how in pursuit of the development of equitable knowledge-based societies.

This joint stakeholders' conference will provide an opportunity for participants to strengthen new and existing ties and will focus on strengthening the networks of ACP and EU higher education and research communities.

These two days will focus on the practical aspects of ensuring projects' expected results, impact and sustainability within the global development framework of improving the quality of learning and innovation that is paramount to achieving the desired inclusive development and economic goals in the ACP Member States.
